The liquidation and upcoming demolition of the original Mandan High School marks the end of an era for some- but as school and city officials state, its removal has been necessary for quite some time, especially now that classes have shifted to the new building. Before it disappears forever, though, the old school held one final surprise in store for Mandan: a time capsule providing a glimpse into the somewhat distant past.

According to the Mandan School Board, the time capsule was first spotted behind a 1957 exterior plaque near the old school’s front doors during an attempt to preserve an entirely different part of its history.

“I had asked our facilities director to remove the markers from the building so we could save them,” said Superintendent Mike Bitz. “When they removed the ‘1957 stone’ by the front door, they found a metal box behind it. They used a grinder to open it, and discovered the time capsule.”

The discovery, which was put on display at the Brave Center during school board elections on June 10, held a vast selection of newspapers, books, and other historical documents from the early days of Mandan High in 1956/1957. Its contents include all of the following:

- 1956-1957 District Budget and Tax Levy
- 1956-1957 MHA Athletics Financial Statement
- Superintendent’s Report for the 1956-1957 School Year
- 1957 Class Lists for students in Grades 7-12
- School history, construction plans, blueprints, student handbook, and class schedule
- School election ballot and additional facts
- Morton County Commissioner’s Proceedings
- A Mandan Daily Pioneer newspaper front page from August 12, 1957
- “World History for a Better World”, a book written by former Mandan superintendent William Neff and former MHS teacher Mabel Planter.

When viewed together, these components provide an extremely unique look into the past, and one that comes as an unexpected surprise even to those who are currently on the school board. Superintendent Bitz notes that the differences between old and new academia are fascinating to observe, even as simply a relic of times past.

“It was more of a history lesson than anything we could use today,” said Bitz, “especially when it comes to things like the board minutes, teacher pay, budget, and student handbook. The school board and many of the older people who looked at it while voting in the election found it cool and interesting, though I haven’t spoken to any students who have seen it yet.”

Following its initial showing and reveal, these historic artifacts have remained in the Brave Center for visitors to observe. The Public School District hopes to eventually move them into the new high school building on July 4th, after donating any items of interest to the Mandan Historical Society. The district has also expressed an interest in creating another time capsule for the new Mandan High, though the details of such a program are still under consideration.
