City committee proposes to strengthen city weed ordinance

Proposed changes would support admin fee, last-resort $500 fine

BY RYAN SCHLEHUBER
BEULAH BEACON EDITOR

Property owners within the city of Beulah who do not keep up with landscaping maintenance may see stiffer penalties soon.

In an effort to keep the spread of weeds down and to better encourage property owners to mow/spray their yards, an ad-hoc committee has proposed a few revisions to the ordinance, which includes adding administration fees and, when absolutely needed, to flex a $500 fine, which is in the current ordinance but has not been utilized up until now.

Ward 1 Councilman Tim Aichele brought up the idea of “adding more teeth” to the ordinance at the July 7 council meeting and a committee was formed shortly after, consisting of Aichele, Ward 2 Councilman Adam Baker and City Operations Director Assistant Jennifer Wolf, to make revisions to an ordinance that Aichele said hasn’t been done in close to 30 years.

Baker and Aichele had spoke with City Operations Director Assistant Jennifer Wolf about the many violations of noxious weeds and unkempt properties seen within the city limits and discussed what could be done to remedy the situation.

“Jen has been spending a lot of time on sending letters and waiting for responses and calling property owners,” Baker said. “The main thought is, if it clears legal review, to make it more efficient.”

Aichele said the committee has turned in its proposed changes to city attorney Scott Solem, which Aichele expects he will bring it to council when it is finished, in which there will be a first and second reading of the revisions before council decides to accept them.

resources and fisheries for generations to come.”

Gooss said the DWC expanded its commitment to conservation and education by “developing a focused approach of outreach to individuals with the passion and desire to take the lead in ensuring our resources are protected for generations to come.”

“This award is designed to support the next generation of fisheries professionals,” Gooss said. “Investing in the next generation of fisheries professionals is a crucial step in safeguarding our natural heritage. Elen’a passion and commitment are exactly what we need as we look to address the challenges facing North Dakota’s aquatic ecosystems.”
