However, retirement didn't suit him for long—he later worked at Maynard's in Browns Valley and also helped his nephew, Richard, on the farm. Curt enjoyed many hobbies, including fishing, deer hunting, and snowmobiling. He also liked listening to the Farmer's Market, taking scenic road trips, play-ing cards and keno, and enjoyed going for breakfast to listen to the ladies aid. Above all, Curt treasured time with his family. He found great joy in farming and loved helping his son, Jamie, with baling. He also cherished moments spent with his grandchildren, especially playing Chinese checkers with his grand-daughter, Ava. Husband's 'jokes' make wife the target of every punchline

DEAR ABBY: I've been married for 49 years. Of course, we've had our ups and downs. My husband, "Sid," said he was joking at the store the other day. When I talk, I gesture with my hands. A woman was coming down the aisle while I was talking, and Sid warned her, "Watch out! She's mean! She's violent!"

At another store, he told the cashier, "Watch out! She's dangerous! She'll steal something! She's a shoplifter." When we got back in the car he said, "Man, why did you buy more cookies? You've eaten that whole pack already!"

When I bring this up to him, he says, "You're just like your mother," and I cry all the way home. In the car the next day, I told him

ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

how this hurts my feelings. His answer was, "You've always been too sensitive. You need to just get over it." I don't know how to respond to all this "poking" at me. — NO FUN IN FLORIDA

DEAR NO FUN: Your husband has a cruel streak and seems to get his kicks by embarrass-ing you in public. Dry those tears, and the next time it happens, smile and CALMLY tell the cashier your hus-band is off his meds and delusional, and to pay no attention to him. I don't know why your husband is being passive-aggressive and neither will you unless you talk with a mar-riage and family ther-apist about it. Please don't wait.

DEAR ABBY: Recently, I had a major surgery and a cancer scare. I don't have cancer, but since then I can't stop thinking about death — not just my own, but also the fear that my husband, dogs and cats will die. When that hap-pens, I will be all alone. I am also struggling with my belief in God. I have never ever been this unhappy. I cry ev-ery day. My body hurts, and I'm frightened all the time. I'm 57 and I know the end of my life is near. I don't know how you can help me, but I'm a mess. I don't want to die, and if I lose my family I will never recover. Please help me. How do people live and not worry about death? — SCARED IN THE SOUTH

DEAR SCARED: I think anyone who has faced their own mortality as you have can appreci-ate what a precious gift life is. None of us has a contract with God, which is why it is so im-portant to value every good day we are given. If you haven't discussed your emotional state with your doctors, you MUST! And when you do, ask for referrals to a licensed mental health professional who can help you rid yourself of these destructive thoughts. You deserve to live a happy, normal life in the time you have on Earth, whether it is short or long. To achieve that, you need to regain your balance. TO MY READERS: Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement, begins at sundown. During this 24-hour period, obser-vant Jewish people fast, engage in reflection and prayer and formal-ly repent for any sin that might have been committed during the previous Hebrew year. To all of you who ob-serve — may your fast be a meaningful one. — LOVE, ABBY

THIS DAY IN HISTORY

On October 1, 1890, an act of Congress creates Yosemite National Park, home of such natural wonders as Half Dome and the giant sequoia trees. Environmental trailblazer John Muir (1838-1914) and his colleagues campaigned for the congressional action, which was signed into law by President Benjamin Harrison and paved the way for generations of hik-ers, campers and nature lovers, along with countless "Don't Feed the Bears" signs.

Native Americans were the main resi-dents of the Yosemite Valley, located in Cali-fornia's Sierra Nevada mountain range, until the 1849 gold rush brought thousands of non-Indigenous min-ers and settlers to the region. Tourists and damage to Yosemite Valley's ecosystem fol-lowed. In 1864, to ward off further commercial exploitation, conser-vationists convinced President Abraham Lincoln to declare Yo-semite Valley and the Mariposa Grove of giant sequoias a pub-lic trust of California. This marked the first time the U.S. govern-ment protected land for public enjoyment and it laid the founda-tion for the establishment of the national and state park sys-tems. Yellowstone be-came America's first national park in 1872.

In 1889, John Muir discovered that the vast meadows sur-rounding Yosemite Valley, which lacked government protec-tion, were being over-run and destroyed by domestic sheep graz-ing. Muir and Robert Underwood Johnson, a fellow environmen-talist and influential magazine editor, lob-bied for national park status for the large wil-derness area around

Yosemite Valley. On October 1 of the fol-lowing year, Con-gress set aside over 1,500 square miles of land (about the size of Rhode Island) for what would become Yosemite National Park, America's third national park. In 1906, the state-controlled Yosemite Valley and Mariposa Grove came under federal jurisdic-tion with the rest of the park.

Yosemite's natu-ral beauty is immor-talized in the black-and-white landscape photographs of Ansel Adams (1902-1984), who at one point lived in the park and spent years photograph-ing it. Today, over 3 million people get back to nature annu-ally at Yosemite and check out such stun-ning landmarks as the 2,425-foot-high Yosemite Falls, one of the world's tallest wa-terfalls; rock forma-tions Half Dome and El Capitan, the largest granite monolith in the U.S.; and the three groves of giant sequoi-as, the world's biggest trees.
